Walker was forced out of the race with GRANDFATHER AND a broken collar bone.

The management heard of this and It was arranged to team Palme with Drobach. Devonovitch, the latter's partner, had been hanging up nals of distress for some time and was very strong rider. He has ridden in thirty-day races in Australia, so there seems little chance of his not sticking

With tears running down his cheeks "Pedlar" Palmer left the track early this morning, having been informed that his team-mate, Gordon Walker a broken collarbone, caused by falling from his wheel about 3 o'clock.

At 2.20 o'clock Walker was literally riding in his sleep. There came a sudand fell. On came the other riders. Some of them awoke in time to swerve. Others fell over Walker, and soon there was a pile of struggling men and mixed wheels.

The other riders got to their machines. but Walker did not move. At first it was thought he was still asleep, but then it was discovered he was uncon sclous. He was carried from the track as his partner, Palmer, drowsy and heavy from sleep, came staggering out and mounted his wheel.

Then they found that Walker had a broken collar-bone. He regained consclousness and grabbed his wheel. "I'm going to get back in this," he aid. "You can't keep me out."
